

Straight Wolf Road Route Upheld

All Objections Are over Ruled; Court Asked to Dissolve Injunction

After years of fighting and much inactivity on the part of county officials, the matter of locating the Wolf Road paving from the Hickory Creek south thru the Cleveland farm in a straight line to connect with the Lincoln Highway has been settled in favor of the straight route which, after it was surveyed in 1929 was approved and accepted as the logical route by both the county and state highway departments.

In the condemnation proceedings recently brought by Will County in county court before Judge Win Knoch of Du Page County, Mr. Cleveland, thru his attorney, Wm. D. Heise, former state's attorney of Will County, filed 12 objections. Attorney Albert H. Krusemark, representing the county, presented such convincing evidence and arguments, that the judge over-ruled 11 objections and the final and last objection was argued on Wednesday morning of this week and was over-ruled by Judge Knoch. Attorney Krusemark scored a decided victory for the county and the people of Frankfort township. As far as the location of the Wolf road is concerned, the straight route has won out.

The obstacle to be overcome by the county, is the temporary injunction suit granted to the school directors of the Cleveland school district property which did not come under the eminent domain act, and could not be acquired for road purposes.

Attorney Krusemark contends that the routing does not interfere with school land and filed a petition Tuesday in the Circuit Court praying Judge E. L. Wilson to dissolve the temporary injunction on the ground that the school directors have no equity in the matter. The injunction case will be tried the forepart of January.

The last and final act will be the matter of damages to be fixed by a jury. This jury was to have been given the case January 3, but due to the injunction suit pending, the case will be delayed for a short time before going to the jury. After the jury has set an award as to the amount to be paid for the land to be used for the Wolf Road right-of-way thru Mr. Cleveland's farm, the county right-of-way committee can advertise for bids and award a contract for the completion of the Wolf Road paving which is the last unfinished project on the $1,800,000 county bond issue program.

Soon as the present legal matters concerning the Wolf Road are settled, the next move is to enlist federal aid to continue the paving of Wolf Road south of the Lincoln highway to route 51. This project is important and deserves federal aid.

Texas Shows Keen Interest In The S. W. Highway

Under date of December 21st, Dr. W. R. Schussler, recently elected president of the Southwest Towns Chamber of Commerce, writes as follows from Houston, Texas, relative to the construction of the Southwest Highway as a national project:

"I have been busy here all day conferring with members of the Houston Chamber of Commerce and Automobile Associations in regard to the Southwest Highway. The powers in Texas have already arranged for the building of the road thru King county, which is the only gap. They are also arranging to urge the authorities at Washington to make it a Federal road. The project really looks good here and everyone is interested."

I leave for Brownsville tonight and will learn more in regard to the situation. They have named the road, "Hug The Coast" Highway, but I feel there will be little opposition to naming it Southwest Highway.

I hope to return about Dec. 26, and will look for new developments in Springfield."

We extend the season's greetings to our many readers and patrons, wishing one and all an abundance of Health, Happiness and a Goodly Share of the Material Prosperity we all so urgently have need of.

"The Days of 49" At The Century of Progress, Chicago Reported One Of The Outstanding Successful Exhibits

No single factor in business activity has had a more salutary effect in the general tendency toward renewed faith in the ultimate rehabilitation of financial affairs both public and private, in State and Nation, than the Chicago, "A Century of Progress" which closed its gates on November 12, for the 1933 period.

The showing of a net revenue for the Fair Corporation of some two and a half million dollars on the season, and the demand for the continuance of the Exposition for 1934 will have a still greater stimulating effect on the public mind. 22,320,456 visitors saw the Fair, spending nearly $37,500,000 for admissions to the grounds and various attractions.

Over 22,000 persons were employed by the Association and exhibitors, and paid a living wage for services rendered in the different departments.

The leaders in all classifications of concessions in the order named were: The Greyhound Bus Co., The Century News Co. and the Eitel Inc., restaurant operators, each far over the million mark.

The skyline took $771,648.03 closely followed by The Belgian Village with a gross of $650,293.86 and the Streets of Paris, with $635,831.94.

The "Days Of 49" Mining Camp exhibit, a tribute to the Pioneers of the great west a century ago, attracted much attention and grossed an amount for admissions closely following the top liners enumerated.

Beyond the possibility of a doubt the 1934 patronage will far surpass that of 1933, but Fair Officials declare that an attendance of 50 per cent of that during last summer, in 1934 will pay off all obligations for the two years run 100 percent on the dollar.

Rock Island To Exhibit Again at Fair

L. M. Allen, Passenger Traffic Manager of the Rock Island Lines, announces that this railroad will again exhibit in the Travel & Transport Building of the Chicago World's Fair in 1934. The exhibit will occupy the same location as in the 1933 Century of Progress Exposition.

"We had such favorable reaction to our 1933 exhibit that we have decided to continue it during 1934, with certain changes and improvements which the 1933 Fair demonstrated to us as desirable," said Mr. Allen. "We will again show our motion pictures in natural colors of the Golden State Limited and the Rocky Mountain Limited routes, but greatly improved. In other words, we plan to have a 'bigger and better' exhibit in 1934. Our 1933 register of visitors contains names of persons from every state in the Union and from many foreign countries."

The color motion pictures, described as "the most beautiful motion pictures in the 1933 Century of Progress Exposition", are in great demand, prints having been loaned to clubs, civic organizations and colleges, equipped to show them, in all parts of the United States. One inquiry came from Paris, France. The films contain descriptive talks of the routes illustrated.

in Seven Months.

Washington.—Actual cash payments of $115,032,938 have been made to farmers during the first seven months' operation of the agricultural adjustment act.

This total was payment direct to wheat, cotton, and tobacco farmers in return for contracts to reduce acreage planted to those crops during 1934.

In addition, indirect cash returns to farmers have resulted from the drawing up and placing in effect of 24 marketing agreements, 13 of which concerned milk in that many cities. Secretary Wallace estimated that the milk agreements had brought an average increase of 40 cents per hundred pounds in the price paid to farmers for raw milk.

The cotton acreage reduction program has thus far resulted in the payment of 1,012,290 farmers of $109,080,526. The farm administration has said these payments have stimulated local business in 800 southern counties and all have not been made yet, since 1,142,115 contracts have been signed by cotton farmers, but some have not yet been approved.

The wheat acreage reduction program is barely under way, with only 77,021 farmers having been sent checks out of 587,213 who have signed applications for contracts. MY MOTHER'S WEDDING SHAWL

By ANNE CAMPBELL

MY MOTHER'S wedding shawl was fine

White cashmere, fringed and gay
With Paisley border, a design
Much liked in mother's day.
In fancy I can see her stand,
A bride in the old hall,
Arranging with a practiced hand
Her pretty wedding shawl.

She wore it over hoops that hid
Beneath her white silk dress.
Below her chin, as she was bid,
With careless happiness
She tied her flower trimmed bonnet strings.

And smiled to think her tall,
Straight lover would, with whis-perings,
Admire her wedding shawl.

For thirty years she has been gone,
But I remember well
The day I begged her try it on;
The tale she had to tell
Of quaint, old-fashioned years gone by,
And all that could befall
A little maid like me, ere I Might wear a wedding shawl.

It is a shawl of memory
That brings her to my side.
She often put it on for me,
And posed with loving pride.
It is a symbol of rich years
We treasure most of all!
The wives of sturdy pioneers
Each wore a wedding shawl.

I think of those young shoulders graced
With that light weight of wool,
And all the hardships that she faced
With faith so beautiful. . . .
The fragrance of old gardens, skies,
And days beyond recall,
And mother's dream of Paradise
Live in her wedding shawl.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

REDDY FINDS OUT WHAT HE WANTS TO KNOW

WHEN Billy Mink asked Reddy Fox why he wanted to know just what kinds of food Jerry Muskrat likes best, Reddy pretended not to hear. He let his tongue run on just as if he hadn't heard that question at all. That is sometimes a handy way of avoiding unpleasant questions or questions that you would rather not answer.

"Now that you mention that Jerry is fond of mussels, I remember having seen him sitting on the Big Rock opening them," said Reddy. "It is funny I shouldn't have remembered that. I've often seen the empty shells in the water where Jerry had been having a feast. Do you eat them, Billy Mink?"

"Not when there are fat trout to be had," laughed Billy, resuming his meal on one and talking between bites. "It is too much work to open those clams. Jerry may have them all, for all I care."

Reddy laughed. "He doesn't seem to mind the trouble. I suppose I wouldn't if that was all the food I had."

"Who said that was all the food Jerry Muskrat has?" demanded Billy Mink. "Who said that? I certainly didn't. If anyone said that they don't know much about Jerry Muskrat. Those fresh-water clams are only a side dish with Jerry. If he depended on those for all his food he wouldn't last long. He would starve."

"How stupid of me!" exclaimed Reddy. "How very stupid of me to make such a remark. Now I think of it, I often have seen Jerry bring up a lily root from the bottom of the Smiling Pool, and eat it."

"If you haven't been blind," declared Billy Mink. "He eats lily roots and other roots growing in the water, and the stems of some of the plants. And he likes other things when he can get them."

"What?" asked Reddy in a very matter of fact tone. "Vegetables from Farmer Brown's garden," replied Billy grinning broadly. "It is a wonder you never have happened to meet Jerry on his way there or back. If there is any one thing Jerry likes it is carrots. He'll take a long chance to get some."

"Well, we all take long chances to get what we like, don't we?" said Reddy, yawning as if he had quite lost interest in the subject. "It's a nice day, isn't it? I think I will trot along and look for a dinner. Seeing you enjoy that fish so has made me hungry." Reddy nodded to Billy Mink and trotted off toward the Green Forest.

Billy Mink stopped eating long enough to watch him out of sight and on Billy's small brown face was a puzzled frown. "Now what was that fellow after?" muttered Billy. "Why is he so interested in Jerry Muskrat's food? It is for no good purpose, I'll be bound. I wonder if I said anything I shouldn't have. I guess the next time I see Jerry Muskrat I'll drop him a hint that Reddy Fox is taking a sudden interest in what he eats."

As for Reddy Fox, he turned as soon as he was out of sight of Billy Mink and with a satisfied chuckle made straight for his home in the Old Pasture. He had found out what he wanted to know and now he wanted to think it over and plan a little.

SOME SHRIMP DISHES

THERE is nothing more tasty than fresh shrimp, but with the canned variety one may always be sure it is wholesome and ready to eat. Shrimps should be rinsed as soon as taken from the can. Split down the back and remove the black streak, wash and drain and chill on ice if to be used as salad. Never retain the juice from the can.

Shrimp Salad.

Rinse and chill the shrimps and place on crisp lettuce leaves. The curled leaves of the head lettuce make a most attractive nest. Place five or six shrimps for each serving. For salad dressing prepare a snappy french dressing, adding a bit of chopped celery, a dash of worcestershire sauce and a drop of tabasco. Serve the salad at once after pouring over the dressing, as it wilts the lettuce if allowed to stand.

Another salad: Arrange the shrimps around a mound of mayonnaise in the center, on lettuce. On top of the mayonnaise place a ring of green pepper; in the ring, straight up, stick a tuft of tender celery tips; around the pepper on the mayonnaise place six or eight capers. Serve from the table.

Shrimp Fricassee.

Rinse and prepare two cans of shrimps. Prepare a pint of white sauce to which a few dashes of cayenne is added; when boiling hot and smooth add the shrimps, broken into small pieces, a few drops of worcestershire sauce. Remove from the fire, add one egg yolk beaten and several spoonfuls of thick cream, add one teaspoonful of lemon juice and serve on triangles of toast. If the cream is sour the lemon juice may be omitted.

Shrimp Wiggle.

Sift two cans of shrimps into two cupfuls of white sauce. When well heated through pour over rounds of hot buttered toast. Sprinkle over each a few hot seasoned peas and serve. One may arrange the toast around the platter and have the peas in a mound in the center.

SHORT SHAFTED CLUB
FOR CHIP SHOTS

ON SHORT chip shots a club that can be played like a putter is useful. Here the ball can be lofted for approximately one-third of the distance and allowed to run the rest of the way. While the star golfer generally uses a mashie or similar club for this shot, the average player would be safer with a less forceful and less demanding implement. Just the proper touch is needed here to send the ball accurately to the vicinity of the pin. A small mistake in the swing is likely to land the club-head in the turf and ruin the shot. A short shafted club is particularly suited for such situations. The short shaft permits standing near the ball and almost the same mechanics are employed as in playing a long putt.

Panama Canal Toll

All commercial vessels using the Panama canal are required to pay toll. Rates are based upon the tonnage and the class of cargo carried. For the fiscal year of 1931-32, 5,073 ships paid a total of $20,707,856 in tolls. From its opening on August 15, 1914, until the close of business June 30, 1932, 69,466 toll paying vessels had passed through the canal and the gross toll amounted to $292,864,830.

SYNOPSIS

Waiting in the minister's study while the wedding procession is being marshaled, Jim Franklin, about to be married to Doris Carmody, is stabbed to death. Callis Shipley, one of the bridesmaids, is obviously in a state of anxiety. Peter Cardigan, novelist, and amateur detective of some note, with Sergeant Kilday, of the New York police, begin the official investigation.

CHAPTER II

Suspects

"Here," said Peter, "is the knife that killed Franklin."

The group in the sacristy turned startled glances in his direction.

"Where did you find that?" Nick Royce demanded.

Peter explained how it had been hanging in its scabbard, high on the wall of the study.

Sergeant Kilday, handling it carefully by the scabbard, as Peter had done in order not to mar any fingerprints there might be on the handle, examined it minutely.

"Ever seen this before, Doctor?" he inquired of the rector.

"Yes, it is mine. I brought it from Jerusalem."

"Did you usually keep it in your study?"

Doctor Abernathy nodded. "All the relics on the west wall of the study are from the Holy Land," he explained.

The sergeant handed the weapon carefully to one of his assistants. "Look the handle over for fingerprints," he ordered. "You can use the study. As soon as you're through with it, bring it back to me. I want to have a look at the blade, next."

Then, turning, he smiled significantly at Nick Royce.

"So you didn't have time to run home and hide the knife, eh, Mr. Royce?"

"Don't be a fool, Kilday." The rallyer had died out of the newspaper man's voice. "In the first place, I doubt if that's the weapon which killed Franklin. Secondly, there were half a dozen people who had as good an opportunity to kill him as I. And the others had motives. I hadn't."

"Half a dozen people? Perhaps you can tell me who they were?" Kilday's tone was eager, but freighted with doubt.

Royce glanced slowly around the room before replying, his eyes lingering, momentarily, on both Doctor Abernathy and Ambrose Carmody.

"Mr. Carmody here had some words with Franklin in the study a short time before the murder."

Carmody smiled briefly, as he shrugged. It was evident that he thought the statement beneath his defense.

"And your son, Mr. Carmody," Nick Royce continued calmly. "Rylie came back here and threatened Jim Franklin a short time before the wedding."

"Rylie?" Carmody's tone expressed his indignation. "Be careful who you try to involve in this affair, Royce."

The editor of Topics turned to the rector for confirmation. "How about it, Doctor Abernathy? You were here."

The rector was obviously reluctant to speak. "Yes," he said finally, "Rylie was here. He had an argument with Mr. Franklin in my study, a short time before the wedding."

"But he left right away," Doctor Abernathy hurried to add. "I talked to Franklin after that. So did Mr. Royce. The idea that Rylie could have been connected with this is preposterous."

"What time was this quarrel?" Kilday demanded.

"I couldn't say, exactly." The rector was still doubtful. "Not later than a quarter of four, I am sure."

"Probably earlier than that," added Royce. "Rylie was the first one who quarreled with Franklin, and that was right after we came. We arrived at twenty minutes of four."

"Did I understand you to say that Rylie was the first one to quarrel with Franklin, Nick?" Peter Cardigan leaned forward, elbows on knees, his lean brown hands clasped together, watching the other man intently. "He had more than one quarrel here, then?"

Royce nodded, but glanced at Carmody, before replying verbally. "There was a woman," he said.

Ambrose Carmody turned toward the man stiffly. "I suppose you gave an account of that to your newspaper, too?"

"Of course." And then, for the first time defending himself, Royce hurried to say, "What else could I do? Every paper in town will have an account of it—and of this woman, too."

"It was Helen Train," he continued, this time addressing Kilday. "Choo Choo Train, of the Scandals. Franklin made no secret of his attachment for her. The whole town knew it—every one except, perhaps, the Carmodys."

Ambrose Carmody sat down heavily. "When was this?" he asked. "Before or after I talked with Franklin?"

"After," Royce's tone was kindly. "Sorry, Mr. Carmody, but you asked for it. Choo Choo came in after Doctor Abernathy entered the church. She and Jim quarreled. Jim wanted to know what she was doing here. He was angry. She claimed that he had sent for her. I hushed them up. I was afraid the sound of their voices could be heard inside the church."

"Come in here," Jim said and, grabbing her by the arm, pulled her into the study. That was the last I heard."

"Did you see her again?" Kilday wanted to know.

"No. She must have left by the back door."

"How about Franklin?" Peter Cardigan inquired. "Did you see him after that, either?"

Royce hesitated, as though for reflection. "No-o," he said slowly. "Come to think of it, that was the last I saw of Jim."

They were interrupted by one of Kilday's assistants, entering from the study with the dagger.

"No prints, Sergeant," he reported. "The handle must have been wiped clean."

"It was too much to hope for," replied Kilday, as he drew it from its scabbard.

The blade was about five inches long and curved only slightly. The most interesting feature of the dagger was its handle of elaborately carved ivory, with a curved metal hilt in the shape of two ram's horns, their tips pointing downward. There were no stains on the blade.

"You Will, or I'll—"

"Naturally, there wouldn't be," Peter pointed out. "The slayer wiped it off on the curtain. But I am sure this is the knife which was used."

"Why are you so sure?" Kilday looked doubtful.

"Simply this." The novelist took the dagger from his friend and pointed to the curved hilt. "This explains the bruise at either end of the deep wound. The dagger, you see, was driven in all the way to the hilt. It was a powerful blow. Each tip of the ram's horn left its mark on the slain man's body. Come and I'll show you."

In the study, Peter's theory was borne out by the wound which had caused Franklin's death. The blue bruises at either end of the wound, when measured against the hilt of the dagger, fitted perfectly.

"It begins to look as though it wasn't a premeditated crime," Sergeant Kilday began. "The murderer or murderers, whichever the case may be, grabbed this weapon from the wall in a fit of passion. It appears that he brought no weapon with him."

Peter stared thoughtfully at the rear door of the room. "I wonder how much this door had to do with it," he said. He spoke softly, as though giving voice to his thoughts, rather than expression to any formulated opinion.

"If that theory is correct," he continued, "there was no reason for the murderer to conceal his movements when he entered the study. Then it would have been some one whom either Royce or the rector saw entering the room. If the crime wasn't premeditated, there was no reason why the murderer should have slipped in here by the rear door."

It was clear that Kilday, who had paused to listen to his friend's reflections, shared his doubts.

They were interrupted by an exultant detective.

"Look what we found in the garden, Sergeant."

Carefully wrapped in a handkerchief to prevent marring any fingerprints there might be on the weapon, the officer exhibited his find.

It was a revolver, Kilday examined it, clucking softly under his breath. "Not premeditated, eh? Looks like we were guessing in the dark, Peter. Now we have something to go on."

Turning to the rector, he exhibited the weapon for examination. "I don't suppose this was one of your relics, was it, Doctor?"

"I have never owned a revolver in my life," denied Doctor Abernathy hastily.

The detective handed the exhibit to one of his assistants. "Try it for fingerprints," he ordered tersely, his searching gaze coming to rest on Nicholas Royce.

"This actress you saw here. Know where she lives?"

"I can find out very easily."

The sergeant turned away briskly. "I can do it quicker, if you don't already know."

There was a speculative light gleaming in his eyes as he turned to Peter Cardigan. "I'm going to have a talk with this woman," he said. "Want to go along?"

"Of course," the novelist agreed. "But I still am very doubtful about her ability to have delivered that blow. That required more strength than the ordinary woman possesses, I think."

"Getting back to me, eh?" Nick Royce's smile was sardonic.

"Not necessarily. You have told us about the two Carmodys and the actress. Was anyone else here?"

The newspaper man hesitated, and when he spoke his manner was very deliberate. "I've mentioned all the men," he said. "Doctor Abernathy and I were here most of the time. Rylie Carmody came in early and quarreled violently with Jim in the study. His father," he glanced at Ambrose Carmody, "came back here just a few minutes before the wedding was to start. I think he quarreled with Jim, too."

"Perhaps I may be able to help a little," Doctor Abernathy volunteered hesitantly. "Mr. Royce was out for a while and in his absence, there were two other visitors, a woman and a man."

"Two others?" Kilday exclaimed. "Man, why didn't you tell us about this before?"

"You gave me no opportunity," declared the rector with dignity. "The man I recognized from his newspaper pictures. He was Daniel Bullis, the well-known politician."

"Dan Bullis?" The sergeant whistled. "Did you recognize the woman, too, Doctor?"

"No."

"Could you describe her?"

The rector was doubtful. "She was a very handsome woman," he said. "A blond, I think. At least, she gave the impression of fairness. She was dressed in blue, an afternoon frock I believe, but I can't be sure of that, either. I am sure she was dressed in blue, however."

"You are certain the man was Daniel Bullis?"

"Yes, reasonably sure. I've often seen his pictures."

"Doctor Abernathy, suppose you tell us in your own way just what happened when these two people entered the sacristy."

"Well," the rector crossed his knees slowly, "the woman entered first. I was called to the telephone in the study. When I came out, she was quarreling with Franklin. She seemed quite hysterical and Franklin, too, was angry."

"I didn't hear what had gone before, but as I came through the door, the woman said, 'You will or I'll—'"

"Franklin grabbed her roughly and shut off the last part of her sentence by clapping his hand over her mouth."

"Doctor Abernathy," he said, "this woman is growing hysterical. May we use your study?"

"Let me talk to her," I advised him, thinking that I might be able to quiet her."

"But Franklin refused my help. I can handle this myself," he told me. "I then addressed the woman, who had been silent since she had been aware of my presence. 'This is a serious time for a quarrel,' I told her. 'If there is anything between you and Mr. Franklin which I should know, now is the time to speak.'"

"That's nonsense!" Franklin interrupted me. "If you will just permit us to use your study for a few minutes, we can reach an understanding. This is a client of mine, Doctor," he explained. "The misunderstanding is of a confidential nature, concerning a trust—a trust fund."

"He appealed to the woman. 'For heaven's sake, tell him so,' he said. 'Can't you see the position you are placing both of us in? Everything is going to be all right.'"

"The woman in blue nodded in confirmation of his statement," the rector continued, "and after that assurance, I allowed them to enter the study. Franklin closed the door after him."

"Could you hear what was said after the door was closed?" Kilday inquired eagerly.

"I didn't listen," the doctor replied with dignity.

"I didn't mean it in that way," the sergeant hastened to assure him. "But their voices were raised, weren't they? You could scarcely have avoided hearing them if they were quarreling."

"Perhaps not, under ordinary circumstances," Doctor Abernathy agreed. "But the organ was playing, inside the church. I could tell they were quarreling, however. I could hear the woman's voice, raised shrilly, from time to time. But I could not distinguish what was being said."

"And then what happened?" Peter Cardigan prompted.

"Then Daniel Bullis came in, through the side door of the sacristy. 'Where's Jim Franklin?' he asked me. I told him he was in the study but could not be disturbed. You see the woman was still in there."

"And Bullis waited for him?"

"No." The rector leaned forward earnestly. "Bullis swore. He said, 'Franklin can't put me off any longer,' and walked on into the study without knocking."

"What did you hear then?"

"I heard nothing more inside the study. I had just decided to inform Mr. Carmody concerning the quarrel, when Mr. Royce came back."

Lesson for December 31

THE LIFE OF PAUL

LESSON TEXT—Philippians 3:1-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. II Timothy 4:7.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Stories of Paul.
JUNIOR TOPIC—In Sight of the Goal.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Aiming High.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Debt to Paul.

In order to grasp the meaning of this lesson it is necessary to understand the entire letter to the Philippians. The occasion for writing to the Philippians was the receipt of a much needed contribution from the hand of Epaphroditus for Paul's support while in prison (Phil. 4:10-18). The church was perhaps small and certainly poor (II Cor. 8:1-3), yet it repeatedly sent gifts to him (II Cor. 11:3, 9). It is therefore a letter of a grateful missionary to the church which sent means for his support.

I. The True Israelite. (vv. 1-3).

Certain Judaistic teachers had persistently dogged the steps of Paul. Against such he issues the warning, "Beware of dogs"; "beware of evil workers"; "beware of the concision." The true Israelite is the one who worships God in the spirit, rejoicing in Christ Jesus, having no confidence in the flesh.

II. Paul's Ground of Confidence. (vv. 4-6).

Paul had everything in which a true Jew might glory.

1. "Circumcised the eighth day" (v. 5).

This was the literal requirement of the law for those born under the Abrahamic covenant. His being circumcised showed his true upbringing.

2. "Of the stock of Israel" (v. 5).

He was of the chosen nation by blood and birth.

3. "Of the tribe of Benjamin" (v. 5).

The first king of Israel, whose name he bore, was a Benjaminite. The tribe of Benjamin, though small, had remained loyal to national customs.

4. "A Hebrew of the Hebrews" (v. 5).

This showed he was of Hebrew parentage and not a proselyte.

5. "Touching the law, a Pharisee" (v. 5).

The Pharisees were of the sect most zealous for the rites and ceremonies of Judaism.

6. "Concerning zeal, persecuting the church" (v. 6).

He proved his zeal by his positive effort to stamp out that which was threatening Judaism.

7. "Touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless" (v. 6).

So exactly had he conformed to this requirement of the law that he was consciously blameless.

III. Paul's Estimate of Himself (vv. 7-9).

If any man had a right to confidence on the ground of inheritance and accomplishment, Paul had. The vision of Christ and his merits gave him the true perspective of values. In this light he saw the utter worthlessness of the things he prized most. He counted all things but loss for Christ, even regarding them as refuse in comparison with what he had gained.

IV. Paul's Transcendent Aim (vv. 10, 11).

1. "That I may know him" (v. 10). Personal acquaintance with the Lord Jesus Christ was his supreme desire.

2. "The power of his resurrection" (v. 10).

This is an advance over personal acquaintance with the Lord. It is the expression of the life of Christ through the apostle.

3. "The fellowship of his sufferings" (v. 10).

It is suffering for righteousness' sake, the common experience of all who will follow the Lord.

4. "Attain unto the resurrection of the dead" (v. 11).

It is not only to be resurrected but to have part in the first resurrection, that is, the resurrection from among the dead, when the Lord Jesus Christ comes back to the earth (I Thess. 4:16, 17).

V. Paul Presses Toward the Goal (vv. 12-14).

Paul clearly grasped the meaning of his perfection in Christ, yet he was keenly conscious of his personal limitation. Herein is expressed the true law of progress in the spiritual life.

1. Conscious limitations (v. 12).

"Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect."

2. Conscious of a transcendent goal (v. 13).

The Christian life is an upward calling. One must know of heights before he will make any effort to attain unto them.

3. A resolute determination to reach the goal (v. 14).

He declares "This one thing I do." The primary concern of life is not the stage of progress made, but the effort to attain thereto.

Planning the Future

We are always wanting to be doing, to be giving, to be planning for the future, to be mapping out all our life; instead of resting and receiving day by day, leaving the morrow to our God, and rejoicing in Jesus Christ amidst all our falls and failures.

The Live Reality

The profoundest fact of human life is that, for everyone, the real, the only true life is lived in the realm of the spirit.

A FRESH START

WITH INCIDENTAL MUSIC

by Charles
Frederick
Wadsworth

IN THE supper room of the Embassy hotel, New Year's eve festivities were in full swing.

At tables encircling the dancing floor, gay groups dined and made ready to welcome the New Year, and danced between courses to the music of the orchestra.

With a modernistic discord the band finished an encore fox trot, and Stanley Allen and Barbara Langford returned to their little table-for-two behind a potted palm in a secluded nook.

"Well," said Stanley in a business-like manner, "I suppose you have your schedule of new resolutions all made out and sworn to."

"Do you think I need to make any new resolutions?" This was asked archly, teasingly.

"I certainly do!" Stanley's reply was emphatic. "You have one very bad habit that irritates me beyond words. Without that, Babs, you would be absolutely perfect!"

"Thank you, kind sir, she said," Babs mocked. "And may I ask what that bad habit is that is devastating the whole countryside?"

"Don't pretend. You know well enough."

"Please verify, then."

"Now look here," Stanley said as he drew geometric figures with a pencil on the tablecloth. "During this current year which is about to come to a close, I have proposed to you just twenty-six times—an average of once every two weeks. Your bad habit is that you have refused me every time. You should do something about it."

"I Move to Lay the Question on the Table."

"For every refusal, as you call it," Barbara reminded him, "there has been a proposal, which makes your habit just as bad as mine. In fact, worse, because you started yours first, and mine was a natural consequence."

"You mean unnatural consequence," Stanley corrected her.

"Well, anyway," Barbara argued, "if you will swear off your bad habit, I won't have to do anything about mine."

She glanced at him without raising her head, and the mischief that looked up through her long curved lashes gave Stanley a little start.

Suddenly he said, "In the meantime, I move to lay the question on the table, to be taken up right after this dance."

He opened his arms to her as she arose.

"I second the motion," she said.

"Carried."

About half way around the floor Stanley spoke into the little ear so close to his face. "Now you are just where you belong." His arm tightened just a little around her as he said it.

"Do you mean here at the Embassy?" More perverseness!

The orchestra stopped for intermission and the couple returned to their table.

Stanley, using a spoon for a gavel,

WHY WE GREET THE NEW YEAR

WHY do we greet thee, O blithe New Year?
What are thy pledges of mirth and cheer?
Comest, knight-errant, the wrong to right?
Comest to scatter our gloom with light?
Wherefore the thrill, the sparkle and shine
In heart and eyes at a word of thine?

The Old was buoyant, the Old was true,
The Old was brave when the Old was new,
He crowned us often with grace and gift;
His sternest skies had a deep blue rift.
Yet straight and swift, when his hand unclasped,
With welcome and joyance thine we grasped.
O tell us, Year—we are fain to know—
What is thy charm that we hail thee so?

Through the ether clear, from the solemn sky
The New Year beckons and makes reply:
"I bring you, friends, what the years have brought
Since ever men toiled, aspired, or thought—
Days for labor, and nights for rest;
And I bring you love, a heaven-born guest;
Space to work in, and work to do.
And faith in that which is pure and true.

rapped lightly on the table. "The house will now come to order and we will take up the previous question. Once more, and for the last time this year, will you marry me, Babs?"

A soprano, singing the vocal interlude with piano accompaniment while the orchestra went out for a smoke, was singing "O Promise Me."

"There," approved Stanley, nodding toward the music platform. "Incidental music. Even the lady is trying to help me out!"

Barbara smiled, but turned pensive. The singer concluded her solo and began another.

"Yes," said Barbara slowly, "and she is trying to help me, too."

The second song was "I Surrender, Dear."

Stanley reached over and gathered Barbara's hands into his own. "Do you really mean it? Are you saying 'Yes'?"

"Yes."

GRAND OPERA RE-OPENS IN CHICAGO

Five widely acclaimed artists new to Chicago opera patrons are to pique the interest of newly recruited audiences at the Civic Opera House when that long dark temple of lyric drama reopened the day after Christmas for a five weeks season, thanks to the sponsorship of a representative group of citizens formed by the late George Lytton and George Woodruff and expertly aided by Paul Longone, director general of the new enterprise.

Marie Jeritza had the distinction of re-dedicating the magnificent Wacker Drive house, appearing in the title role of "La Tosca". Further brilliance was added to the occasion by the introduction of Dino Borgioli, a Tuscan tenor, who, after extensive tours of continental Europe, South America and Australia, invaded America at its western borders and for the past two seasons has been the idol of San Francisco opera goers. He has been a favorite with LaScala audiences and sang with Melba at her last operatic appearance in her native Melbourne.

Marie Chamlee, heard hereabouts in opera only at Ravinia Park, sang for the first time in the Civic Opera House on Wednesday night in "Traviata", with Marlon Claire and John Charles Thomas to complete a refulgent triumvirate. Chamlee, a native of Los Angeles and an outstanding example of the ascendancy of the American artist, made his debut at the Metropolitan Opera House with Farrar and Scotti in the same role he sings here, has many European appearances to his credit and sings perennially in Los Angeles and San Francisco to packed houses.

Grace Moore makes her first appearance before a Chicago audience at the first matinee of the season, Saturday, December 31st, as Mimi in "La Boheme", with Borgioli as Rodolfo and another newcomer, Claudio Frigerio, as Marcello. Frigerio comes to Chicago after three successful seasons at the Metropolitan, but, like Borgioli, first won attention from Americans as an artist in San Francisco, where Beniamino Gigli heard him and arranged a joint recital in New York with him in order to introduce him to the Eastern public.

None of the newcomers during the season is apt to attract greater attention than Marion Talley, Kansas farm girl who stormed the citadel of fame known as the Metropolitan after an audition at 15 and a course of study in New York and Italy financed by public subscription in Kansas City, where she sang as church soloist when only 12. After a retirement of four years, Miss Talley reappears on the operatic horizon as a member of the Chicago Grand Opera Company, singing Gilda, the role in which she made her Metropolitan debut, opposite the Rigoletto of John Thomas and the Duke of Borgioli.

Of favorites of past Civic seasons who return, perhaps, none will be more welcome than Rosa Raisa, who returns in "Aida" on Saturday night December 30th. With Mme. Raisa will appear John Pane-Gasser, making his first appearance with a major operatic organization after himself producing and singing in a performance of "Trovatore" at the Auditorium here and swinging a similar enterprise, with "Aida" as the attraction, in the Court of States on Italian Day at the World's Fair. Desire Defrere is stage director of the rejuvenated enterprise and Giacomo Spadoni, veteran chorus master of twenty-three Chicago operatic seasons, returns to his old post. The entire week's repertoire will be directed by Gennaro Papi. Harry Beaty is technical director.

OFF COMES FAT Hips--Bust--Chin

GET THAT KRUSCHEN
FEELING

Gain Physical Attractiveness—Be Free From Constipation, Gas, Acidity and Liver Troubles.

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast—cut down on pastry and fatty meats—go light on potatoes, butter, cream and sugar—in 4 weeks get on the scales and note how many pounds of fat have vanished.

Notice also that you have gained in energy—your skin is clearer—your eyes sparkle with glorious health—you feel younger in body—keener in mind. Kruschen will give any fat person a joyous surprise.

Get a jar of Kruschen Salts—the cost is trifling and it lasts 4 weeks. If even this first jar doesn't convince you this is the easiest, safest and surest way to lose fat—if you don't feel a superb improvement in health—so gloriously energetic—vigorously alive—your money returned.

But be sure for your health's sake that you ask for and get Kruschen Salts. Get them at any drugstore in the world.

16½ Pounds of Fat Gone
"I've lost 16½ lbs. of fat and have taken about one-third of my second bottle of Kruschen. Sure feeling fine." Mrs. J. E. Brumund, Joliet, Ill.

Wolf road south of Orland but finally had to return home. All outside work for the time being will be side tracked until warmer weather. Many automobiles were stalled due to the cold.

The Orland Park Legion Post assumed the role of Goodfellows and spread Christmas cheer by distributing Christmas baskets to a number of needy families.

Last Friday afternoon the high school and the grades of the Orland Public school held their Christmas program in the school auditorium.

A fine program was given. Santa Claus appeared and rendered a number of squibs on the teachers, pupils and the janitor, as to the gifts they expected Santa Claus to bring them. "Santa on the Air" was the title of a clever offering by the grammar room.

Decorated and electrically lighted Christmas trees from the various schools graced the platform. Santa Claus was on hand to distribute the gifts.

The Christmas exercises held at the Christ Lutheran church on Christmas Eve, were very well attended. The children of the Sunday school presented their program and the members of the Bible Class also took part. The pastor, Rev. A. Lach gave Christmas addresses in German and in English. A Christmas tree in all its glory added its charm to the occasion.

One of the largest attendances of the year, exceeded perhaps only by the attendance at the Palm Sunday and Easter services and the closing Sunday of the Stewardship Contest was present at the morning worship service at the Orland Park M. E. church last Sunday. In his message "A Wonderful Christmas" the pastor told in a wonderful way the gloriously beautiful story of the Birth of the Savior and showed how as in that epochal event of nearly two thousand years ago, when Christ was born into the world, so is His birth continually, day by day, being re-enacted in the hearts of all those who accept Him as the Savior.

The annual Christmas program by the Sunday School was held in the evening and the attendance taxed the capacity of the church. A very pleasing part of the program was the presentation to the church school of a coat rack for the Junior class.

IN MEMORIAM

ENDERS Lydia—In sad and loving memory of our beloved wife and mother who passed away, Dec. 30, 1929.

Deep in our heart lies a picture Of a loved one gone to rest. In memory's frame we will keep it, Because she was one of the best. Our lips cannot speak how we miss her.

Our hearts cannot tell what to say, God only knows our heartache, For the loved one that was taken away.

LOVING HUSBAND AND CHILDREN.

Let
the car speak for itself

HUNDREDS of thousands of people now own and drive Ford V-8 cars. Some neighbor or friend of yours has one. If we told you what we think of the car, you might say we are prejudiced, so we let the car and its owner tell you.

Economy of operation is one of the first points they will emphasize—the owner will boast of it and the car will prove it.

The 1934 car is even better than the 1933—and that was our best car up to its time. The new car is more beautiful—faster—more powerful—gives more miles to the gallon—better oil economy—is easier riding—cheaper to own and operate than any car we ever built.

You owe it to yourself and your pocketbook to ask our Ford Dealer to let you see this car, and let you drive it for yourself. At the wheel of the car you will be sure to reach a right decision. The Ford V-8 will tell you its own story.

Still Valued on Farm

More than 15,000,000 American horses and mules still hold their jobs on farms, and Wayne Dinsmore foresees the return of these animals to first place in the esteem of good farmers, since "men who stick to horses and mules, planning their work wisely, raise just as much crop at much less cost."

Writing in Horse, Mr. Dinsmore observed, "As a matter of fact, the horse and mule, as a chief source of power, never left the farm. Some decrease occurred, it is true, but much less, so far as work animals actually in use are concerned, than is generally supposed."

"In 1919 we had about 17,000,000 head of horses and mules at work in harness or under saddle on farms; in 1932 about 15,500,000 were so employed. This is a decrease of about 1,500,000 at work, due to an increase of tractors from 246,083 in 1920 to 920,210 in 1930, and of motor trucks from 139,169 in 1920 to 900,385 in 1930."—Literary Digest.

BEAUTY TALKS

FINE POINTS IN MAKE-UP

ALWAYS apply your make-up before a good, clear mirror, preferably one of the magnifying mirrors which were so very expensive a year or so ago but have since been considerably reduced.

Then, be sure to have that mirror so that the light from a nearby window falls over your shoulder and full on your face without any distorting shadows. Also when make-up is used for daytime be sure it is applied in daylight and when intended for evening it should be applied before artificial lights.

Now let us start changing facial contours by means of make-up. When applying rouge, don't color both cheeks exactly the same. Nature doesn't balance the two halves of our faces, you know. High cheek bones can be made to look less prominent if rouge is blended directly over them. Hollows in the cheeks should be rouged. It makes the face look fuller. A long, thin face may be made to look broader if the rouge is blended from the cheek bones well outward toward the ears. Bring your color over the greater portion of the cheek, but avoid getting the rouge too low as that gives an old and hard appearance and makes the contrast between powdered neck and rouged jaw line too great. A very broad face can be made to look longer or thinner if the rouge is placed a little below the cheek bones and just a small part of the cheek rouged, leaving white space between the nose and the rouged area and again between the outer edge of rouge and the ears.

Now for the mouth—do not rouge a very full lower lip at all. Simply apply lip paste to the upper lip and rub the two lips together to get a little color on the lower lip.

For a full upper lip, blend the rouge so that it fades completely before reaching the outer edges—that is the upper lip and outline.

If the mouth is too long stop the rouge at a little past the center and blend so that it fades completely before reaching the corners.

The very thin mouth can be made to look more generous if the rouge is carried well up and down to the edges and a little past the actual outline of the lips.

There are any number of little tricks one can employ to enhance the work of Dame Nature. Make-up is a fine art. It requires practice and persistent experimenting before perfection is attained.

Normally your make-up shouldn't need altering during the day, whether you're swimming, or exercising strenuously, or going through a normal routine. If your face gets dirty use soap and water and dust it with powder brushed off with a camel's hair brush.

WHY SOME TREATMENTS FAIL

I HAVE had a great many letters, the gist of which is: "Why has my beauty treatment failed to bring the desired results?" Occasionally, it is difficult to say. But, more frequently "there's a reason."

In the first place, too much emphasis is put on the local treatment and the use of creams and lotions and too little said about keeping the system in trim. Mind you, I am not casting any aspersions on creams and lotions for I very strongly advocate their use. But women are more prone to spend time and energy and money on these preparations than on studying diet and exercising.

If I were selling an acne cream or lotion, I would tell the customer that the preparation would very definitely help providing that her diet was right, that she was exercising, watching her system to see that all waste is regularly eliminated. In other words, eruptions are as a rule, caused by some systemic disturbance, and most frequently indigestion, constipation, etc., and the cause must be corrected or altogether successful results cannot be expected from external applications. Can creams or lotions applied to the face correct a condition of chronic constipation? No—of course not. Once the cause is corrected the creams and lotions may serve to give the skin a clear and radiant look, but not before then.

There are a great many conditions that can be treated by external means, to be sure. Freckles, for instance, can be bleached from without. But the majority of skin and hair conditions need both external as well as internal care.

Another reason why some beauty treatments are unsuccessful for one woman and quite successful for another is simply that skins do differ. This is a very important point. Women with dry skins need nourishing skin foods. Women with oily skins need astringents.

Improper method of application, disregard of directions, and haphazard, helter skelter, "now and then" applications instead of regular, persistent care are other reasons why treatments fail.

If I advise you to do this or that I want you to do your part understandingly. There is a definite reason for it all. The better you understand the more faith you will have, the more direct your efforts will be, the surer and swifter the results.

Rebuild the "Eternal City" MADE BLIND BY "GOD OF MONEY"

Systematic Beautification, and the Restoration of Historic Structures, Is Today Renewing the Grandeur That Was Rome.

Striking thrice with a gold hammer on the "Holy Door" of St. Peter's basilica in the Vatican City, Pope Pius XI inaugurated an extraordinary holy year. Normally the Holy Door is opened once every quarter century, but this time it has been sealed for only eight years.

Again to thousands of pilgrims and tourists, "all roads lead to Rome." Modern sky routes, too, now focus on this historic city. Many visitors will arrive at the 300-acre airport of Littorio; others will disembark from seaplanes at nearby Ostia.

"Today, new sights will greet the eyes of visitors to Rome because the eternal city is being transformed by a huge building and beautification program," says a bulletin from the Washington (D. C.) headquarters of the National Geographic society. "With a metropolitan record of 26 centuries, the 'seven hills' have seen a dozen Romes, but modern Rome is as interesting as its historic predecessors."

"Rome today is to a very considerable extent a boom town. But it is more than that, because its city planners are archeologists as well as architects. 'Remember, and Onward!' seems to be the watchword of the day. Forums, the temple of Vesta, the theater of Marcellus, and a thousand other monuments of past grandeur are being preserved and restored with the same careful attention that marks the construction of a new ministry building or a group of up-to-date apartment houses."

"No longer will ancient palaces and the colosseum be rock quarries or lime kilns where precious marbles are burned. Classic Rome protrudes everywhere in the present city."

"New Rome has her catacombs—and plans for subways. The famous Diocletian baths are overshadowed by the biggest treasury building in Europe. Even the baths have been turned into a museum containing one of the richest collections in the city. Hadrian's tomb, or the Castel Sant' Angelo, now faces an immense new ministry of justice. The famous seven hills have been partially leveled or tunneled to answer the requirements of modern transportation. Other hills have been taken in by an expanding city, as preparations are being made for a future population of 2,000,000, approximately twice what it now has. Fifty new bus lines have replaced many trolleys."

"Ancient Rome is said to have invented uniform kitchenette apartments; the new city continues the policy by constructing blocks of modern apartments in the outlying districts. The Capitoline Hill district has been cleared and beautified with parks in order to display to better advantage the restored theater of Marcellus, the temple where the vestal virgins once kept their holy fires burning, and the $5,000,000 Victor Emmanuel II monument (symbol of unified Italy and New Rome)."

"An abundant water supply is provided through ancient and modern aqueducts that come stalking in from distant sources. And lovely fountains, such as the Trevi, which spouts 17,000,000 gallons of water a day, have been illuminated by electric lights to enhance their beauty."

"Even the old consular roads that lead to Rome have been widened and resurfaced. A new road, the Via del Coll, carved through a former congested district between the Victor Emmanuel monument and the colosseum, has recently been opened by Premier Mussolini. Visitors will find also that they have to walk on the left instead of the right sides of the streets, or be told about it by the police. Some of the streets have become one-way thoroughfares to pedestrian traffic."

"Another change that pilgrims will find since the last holy year is that the Vatican is an independent city. Occupying only a little over 108 acres, approximately one-eighth of the size of Central park in New York city, it has its own civil government, coinage, postage stamps, telegraph and radio. The letters S. C. V. (Stato della Città del Vaticano) appear on the tags of all motor cars belonging to residents of the Vatican City."

"This smallest independent government also has the world's shortest railway line, but one of the finest. It is only about 600 feet long, is double tracked, and has a beautiful station. A 300-foot tunnel under Vatican hill serves as the railway 'yards.' The three coaches belonging to the pope are unusually magnificent."

"The Vatican library, a portion of which collapsed on December 22, 1931, destroying several thousand valuable books and pieces of ceramics, has recently been repaired."

"That Rome welcomes the pilgrim and tourist from the United States is evidenced by the fact that Italian visas are not necessary for American passports."

GRAIN AREA AS SHOWN IN 1932

Figures on World's Cereal Consumption.

What does the world eat?

Its two thousand millions of population managed to consume in 1932, in one form or another, 153,000,000 tons of wheat, 59,000,000 tons of rye, 51,000,000 tons of barley, 82,000,000 tons of oats, 122,000,000 tons of corn, 105,000,000 tons of rice.

At any rate, that much was produced, according to the latest figures of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, of which the United States is a member, which keeps track of world production.

The statistical picture is carried through the first half of 1932, when reports from all over the globe showed 1,240,046 square miles devoted to the culture of wheat, corn, rye, barley, oats, rice and minor cereal crops.

The two billion individuals are shown to be scattered over an area of 345,000,000 square miles—about five and a half persons to the square mile. Only about one three-hundredth of the total area is devoted to the production of cereals—a total of 1,240,046 square miles.

The United States had the largest amount of land devoted to cereal production, a total of 84,125,000 hectares, a hectare being approximately two and a half acres. India was a close second with approximately 79,000,000 hectares.

Asia, with a population of 1,072,447,000, was far in the lead in respect to population, containing 53 per cent of all the people on the globe. Europe, without Russia, had a population of 380,585,000. Russia's population was estimated at 163,166,000, or just a little below that of North and Central America, which totaled 168,706,000. South America trailed the continents in population, with 84,538,000 persons.

The tables show little increase in the amount of land under cultivation during the last decade. The land devoted to wheat culture has increased about 10,000,000 hectares over the period from 1923 to 1927, but rye, barley and potato acreage has remained stationary. There has been about a 5,000,000 hectare increase, however, in the land devoted to corn and a 3,000,000 hectare increase in the rice area.

By far the greater part of the world's land remains unplowed, the figures show, with a great amount of it not adapted to cultivation under present conditions.

Mind-Reading Machine

The old story about the walls of Jerry-built houses being so thin that you could hear your neighbor changing his mind seems likely to come very near the truth.

A machine invented by Dr. Alexander Cannon records any mental reaction, and consists of flexible tubes which are attached to a human subject.

The reactions of the brain are recorded on graph paper. Simple emotions like surprise, love, hate, are recorded, and the machine also registers mental fatigue, the capacity of the mind, reaction to tension or concentration, suicidal tendencies, and whether the subject is telling the truth or lying.

Among other things, it shows that waltz music is soothing, and that it relieves asthma by inducing regular breathing. It is also claimed that it proves telepathy to be a physical fact.

Those Who Count Wealth as Life's Great Prize.

Of course, it is true that few men love, and slave for money for its own sake. What they desire and seek is what money will buy—comfort, ease, luxury, security, place and power. Others are drawn by the fascination that they find in the game of money-making, and to many it is only a game, calling for skill, nerve and courage on the part of those who play it. It is not so much "the love of money" that is "the root of all evil" as the love of and absorption in those things for which it stands, and which it will buy. These soon, and very naturally, become the soul's ideals, above which it is impossible for the soul to rise. What is really challenged by both apostle and philosopher is materialism as a life gospel or philosophy. "To be carnally minded" says St. Paul, "is death," but, "to be spiritually minded is life and peace." The contrast is between two types of life, and it is sharply drawn—between a real life, and a life that is, in issues in death. There is, according to the teachers, "a god of this world who hath blinded the mind," and done it very effectually. There have been people, and "woe" is pronounced on them, "who call evil good and good evil, that put darkness for light, and light for darkness." These, we may suppose, were men whose minds were blinded by "the god of this world." The final catastrophe is when a man ends by being proud of his money and of himself because he is rich. There is a message to all such, if any there be: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be which thou hast provided?" The issue is far broader and deeper than one might suspect from the way that it is so often dealt with. It involves the whole of man's life on this earth, his character, and his attitude toward realities, and his ability to recognize them.

That a man should have a little more or a little less money is not in itself a matter of serious consequence. We are not dealing either in bank balances or the lack of them. The problem that interested both St. Paul and Epictetus was not one of book-keeping. The concern of both was with human souls. In the thought of these two great teachers man was essentially a spirit, or as Alexander Pope puts it, a "vital spark of heavenly flame." The choice for him, therefore, is whether or not he will or will not live in loyalty to his own divine nature, coveting only "the best gifts." Happy is the man who so lives that he is able to respect himself. Wretched is he who loses his self-respect. It is not easy to imagine a more deplorable loss. Perhaps it may be said the ideal life for any man is one which he can respect, and it may be reverence. The ideal always points to perfection and completeness. There is in it something of the absolute. To be without ideals is to be miserably poor. Again, the poet says "man never is, but always to be blest." There must with every intelligent man ever be an "earnest looking forward" and upward. "Set me upon the rock that is higher than I"—so prayed the Psalmist. It is a wisely human prayer. The ideal, if it be truly such, must be "higher" than he who is blessed with a vision of it. It is shocking to think of what should be a soaring or climbing soul as a grubber for wealth as life's great prize. The great benefactors of mankind have been almost, if not wholly without exception, poor men. It is to Grub street and its slaves that men go for inspiration.—From "Case and Comment," in the Indianapolis News.

Time's Changes

"In grandmother's day," says the Louisville Times, "a hairbrush and a cookie jar were all the equipment needed in child training." Today's mother, of course, needs a maid, a book on child psychology, a can-opener and a membership in a cultural-uplift society. — Ft. Wayne News-Sentinel.

Meanings of Names

Here are some boys' and girls' names and their meanings. Perhaps you will find yours among them—Eileen, a torch; Edgar, rich spear; Jennifer, white wave; Joseph, addition, increase; Viva, lively; Vincent, conquering; Trixy, joy-giver; Tony, inestimable; Patty, becoming bitter; Peter, stone.

PRACTICAL APPEAL

"Some facetious members of the congregation," said the vicar, "have been in the habit of putting buttons in the collection plate. May I suggest that, in view of a recent arrival at the vicarage, they substitute safety pins?"—London Tit-Bits.

He Didn't Want It

It was threshing time on the farm. One young girl who was serving dinner passed the coffee to an elderly man. He refused it, saying: "No, thanks. I do not care for coffee."

As the girl turned away, some one bumped her elbow, knocking the cup from her hand and pouring the coffee down the elderly man's back.

"I told you I did not care for coffee," he said, without change of countenance or voice, and went serenely on with his dinner.

Not His Specialty

The President—The college laws which you have violated were made so plain that he who runs may read. The Sophomore—But I'm not a runner, sir. I'm in the weight events.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Liked the Part

A high school class was rehearsing for a play. A lad whose part to a dramatic climax was to embrace his play sister said to the coach: "Is there any time limit to the last scene?"

Hopeful

Conductor—Are you hurt? Hilarius Victim—You bet I am! I knew my rabbit foot would bring me luck. I'll bet you five to one I'm badly damaged.

Shining Light

"Rather polished girl, Mary, don't you think?" "Very. Everything she says casts a reflection on somebody."—Stray Stories.

REALLY NOT HIS FAULT

Office Boy—Please, sir, can I have the afternoon off? My grandmother is dead.

Employer—Why, this is the third grandmother that's died since you've been here.

Boy—Yes, sir; I know, sir; but I can't help it, grandfather will keep on marrying again.

Diplomacy

The Smythes were very fond of their baby.

"Which side of our house do you think he most resembles?" Smythe demanded of their bachelor neighbor. The other was anxious to say the right thing.

"I don't know, old chap," he answered haltingly. "I can't see that he looks very much like the side of a house."

Points of Stress

"My boy Josh is a great help," said Farmer Cornstassel.

"How?" "He criticizes my speeches. He says my emphasis is all right, but sometimes I put it on the penult instead of the antepenult. It's the first time I knew we had raised any such things on the place."

NOT THE SAME

"Then you can recommend Dobbs as a man of good character?" "No, merely as a man of good reputation."

Irked

The train had stopped on the line and the guard was tired of answering stupid questions.

"What's the matter, guard?" came yet another query.

"The signalman up there has got red hair," replied the guard, "and we can't get the engine to pass the box!"—London Tatler.

After Five Years' Suffering and Embarrassment Cuticura Healed

"Eczema spread all over my ears and finally into my hair. It was in dry scales that would reappear as fast as removed and my hair fell out. My ears were very red and I lost much sleep from constant irritation. I could hardly keep from scratching."

"After five years of suffering and embarrassment I read about Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a free sample. After a few applications I began to feel greatly relieved so I bought more, and after using three cakes of Soap and two boxes of Ointment I was healed." (Signed) Mrs. Bertha H. CERTAINLY! DIDN'T YOU KNOW THAT FELS-NAPTHA IS DIFFERENT FROM OTHER SOAPS? LET ME TELL YOU WHY IT'S BRISK AND GENTLE, TOO...

OUR ADVERTISERSSQUIRRELS RAISE FAMILY
IN POLE BOX UNDISTURBED

Not long ago trouble was reported on a telephone line in the vicinity of Newton, N. J. Repairmen sent out to investigate found that a family of flying squirrels had lodged in a junction box on a pole forty feet above the street. At first it was thought it would be necessary to dispossess
the family, but the telephone men were averse to doing this, as the squirrels were young and it was this type of animal that had become rare in those parts. Finally, it was found possible to adjust the wires satisfactorily from outside the junction box without disturbing the nest at all.
This was done, and Mr. and Mrs.
Squirrel and their family were left in peace.

CALL FROM PHILIPPINES
MARKS MOTHER'S DAY

One of the most interesting of the Mother's Day telephone calls was a conversation between Ernest J. Mc-Sorley, in the Philippines, and his mother, Mrs. Emma G. McSorley, in Brooklyn, N. Y. Mother's Day was drawing to a close in Brooklyn when the telephone in the McSorley home rang, and a voice 10,000 miles away said, "Hello, mother, this is Ernest."
It was one of the most distant of the many Mother's Day greetings.

Help at the Right Time

A souvenir telephone call proved a blessing to a 15-year-old Cleveland boy who had journeyed to Chicago to see his first World's Fair. He had run out of funds, with nothing left for carfare home. All turned out well, however, when he was able to make a souvenir call. His mother, after hearing of his predicament, promised to send him the money—
but not until after she had given him a mild scolding.

At other great expositions, souvenir postal cards were the usual means of saying to the home folks,
"Having a fine time. Wish you were here." They were as popular as ever at Chicago last summer, but souvenir telephone calls, to those who were fortunate enough to make them, provided one of the big moments at the Fair.

PERMALLOY IS USED IN MANY SUBMARINE CABLES

The total length of submarine telegraph cable at present in operation utilizing permalloy, the metal alloy invented at the Bell Telephone Laboratories, is about 16,000 miles.
Of this mileage the cables actually terminating in the United States account for only 3,700 miles, but cables connecting with these and others carrying traffic from the United States account for most of the balance. None of these cables is owned or operated by the Bell System.

Facts About the Telephone

The investment in Bell System plant has increased about 75 per cent during the past 15 years.

In 1905, New York's classified telephone directory listed 669 retail grocery stores. The 1933 edition of that publication shows 1,434.

Seventy-four per cent of telephone subscribers in Paris are now served through dial exchanges.

Twenty years ago it was possible to talk by long distance telephone a distance of only 2,600 miles—from
New York to Salt Lake City.

In the last year, more than 2,700, 000 dividend checks were sent to stockholders of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The delivery of telegrams by telephone has been authorized in Argentina. This will be done, however, only on request of either the sender or the addressee.
